A CARD

From the Proprietors of the European Magazine to their Correſpondents and Purchaſers.

IN December, 1789, an Eſſay on Ship-Building, with a catalogue of books, appeared on the blue cover of the Magazine, which has been continued by ſhort papers ever ſince, in the ſame conſpicuous place, with a few reduced drafts, which may not prove, perhaps, very entertaining to many of our readers; but to ſuch we beg leave to remind, that they are very much intereſted in the ſubject, both for defence and trade: nor have they any reaſon to complain of the want of their uſual entertainment, as thoſe eſſays have not coſt them one penny, being printed on the cover, entirely at the expence of the proprietors, and it has been the happy means of eſtabliſhing a ſociety of the moſt able* and reſpectable men of this and other countries, whoſe labours will probably render navigation more ſafe than before. We are happy alſo to inform them, that models for experiments on a much larger ſcale than has yet been tried in any part of Europe, (20 feet at leaſt,) in order to aſcertain the ſolid of leaſt reſiſtance and other criterians not yet ſatisfactorily determined, are about to be laid before the public. As this will require much time and expence it will be out of the power of the ſociety to publiſh a volume of their tranſactions for two or three years to come, we therefore propoſe to keep the ſame channel open for ſuch fugitive pieces, and afterwards to reprint them in pamphlets, as part I. and II. of which are now ready. We return thanks for thoſe already come to hand: many are from liberal and ingenious foreigners, whoſe theoretical and practical abilities do them great credit. We are convinced many judicious obſervations ſtill remain in the cabinets of the curious: ſuch we ſolicit, and ſuch we hope to obtain.

* See the liſt annexed.
